Say Henry Confer Was Strangled to Death Three Companions in Jail Charged With Crime

Inquest Disproved Theory of Accidental Death.

BOBY PLACED ON TRACK

Supposed that Crime was Committed During Drunken Brawl as Four Men were Returning to Work at Orviston Clay Mines.

That Henry M. Confer, of Howard, did not meet his death on the railroad tracks near Orviston, as was published last week, but that he was murdered by persons unknown was the verdict of a Coroner's inquest held in Howard last Saturday. The Coroner's jury found that Mr. Confer had been strangled to death.

Even before the inquest was completed three men were arrested and lodged in jail here charged with the murder. They are Irvin Robinson, Jr., of Mt. Eagle, and Richard Langdon and Durban Carver, both of Clarence. The three men were with Mr. Confer while the latter was walking from the station at Orviston to the clay mines where all four were employed. The theory of the prosecution is that the murder was the result of a drunken brawl.

Robinson, Langdon and Carver each had a quart of whiskey when they started from Orviston to the clay mines. Mr. Confer had spent Sunday with his family at Howard. On Monday two of his daughters drove him to the Beech Creek station. They testified that he had not been drinking for some time and that he had no liquor with him when he boarded the train at Beech Creek. Robinson, Langdon and Carver were under the influence of liquor when they arrived at the mines. Mr. Confer was not with them. Conflicting statements as to his whereabouts first aroused suspicion that something was wrong. An investigation followed. Dr. J. Walter Kurtz, of Howard, who examined Mr. Confer's body, found that his eyes had been blackened from bruises, while other bruises about the throat pointed to strangulation. This prompted the suspicion that Mr. Confer had been murdered and to cover up evidence of the crime his lifeless body had been placed on the railroad track shortly before a dinkey engine and a string of mine cars came along.

When the cars ran over Mr. Confer's body the flesh about the left shoulder and arm was mutilated, but the wheels did not strike the face or neck. As quickly as possible the train was brought to a stop. Members of the crew, who had felt the jolting of the cars as the wheels passed over Confer's body, went back to investigate. In the darkness of early evening they thought a stone might have rolled upon the track. What they found was Mr. Confer's lifeless body. To their amazement they discovered that it was cold, or nearly so. There was but little blood at the scene of the accident. These facts confirmed the suspicions of those who had started the investigation. Questions put to Robinson, Carver and Langdon seemed to elicit some conflicting replies. One statement was that Confer had accompanied them to their shanties, and that he probably had wandered alone back to the railroad tracks. Witnesses were found who stated that Confer was not with the three suspects when they returned to the shanties Even prior to their arrest the three had been discharged at the mines. Robinson was picked up at his home at Mt. Eagle. Langdon and Carver were arrested at Clarence. In all likelihood they cannot be tried at the next term of court.

Thus far the three suspects have not had a hearing. As soon as they secure counsel it is expected that they will petition the court for habeas corpus proceedings. This would force the prosecution to produce at least sufficient evidence to warrant holding the three men for trial in court.

Beyond asserting their innocence the three prisoners have had little to say since their arrest. They occupy separate cells. When Robinson was arrested he remarked:

Langdon and Carver not only asserted their innocence but said that they knew nothing about Confer's death.

The formal writ committing the three men to jail was filed with Prothonotary Foreman yesterday. Col. H. S. Taylor has been retained to defend them.

Robinson is about 40 years old and has a wife and six or eight children. Carver is about 35 years old. He has a wife and three children. Langdon is unmarried. He is about 35 years old.

BIG FEATURES SIGNED FOR OLD HOME WEEK

New York Firm Takes Charge of All Amusements.

LOT OF FREE SHOWS

Noted Aviator Engaged to Give Daily Exhibitions of Dropping Bombs and Fancy Flying—Sensational Diving Act Scheduled.

Progress of a substantial character has been made in the last few days by the several committees in charge of Old Home Week plans. Thomas Brady & Co., of New York, big entertainment and amusement booking agents, have taken entire charge of this feature for Centre County's great celebration. Mr. Brady, head of the firm, spent Tuesday in town going over plans. Contracts are ready to be signed and will be closed likely when Mr. Brady returns to Bellefonte in about two weeks.

An elaborate array of attractions is being arranged by Mr. Brady, all of which he discussed with Chairman Daggett and members of the Amusement Committee. Topping the list is Lieutenant Figelmessy, the noted aviator, who will give daily exhibitions during Old Home Week. This feature alone is costly, but the exhibitions will be absolutely free and have been planned with a view to affording visitors the best to be had in the way of hospitality and entertainment. A detail from Troop L will co-operate with Lieutenant Figelmessy in his exhibitions which are along the line of what the airship does in times of war. His act includes blowing up a portable fort with bombs dropped from his airship when the latter is several thousand feet in the air. Troopers will act as sentries in defending the portable fort and will aim their carbines at the airship in trying to ward off the attack. The feature is pronounced one of the most thrilling produced anywhere in recent years.

Next in prominence in the way of spectacular entertainment will be "Nervo", a sensational diver who makes plunges head-foremost from a high platform. The thrill of his act is added to by the fact that he lands on a smooth platform, which is semi-circular in shape. The force of the fall is thus broken, although to spectators it seems a miracle that he escapes alive. "Nervo" will dive several times daily. This feature also will be absolutely free to all. Mr. Brady is also figuring on booking two small shows as additional free attractions.

There will be numerous side-shows to which a small admission will be charged. Mr. Brady will have entire charge of everything in the amusement and concession line and will arrive in town four days in advance of the celebration to get things in shape. Persons desiring to arrange for concessions are requested to write to Thomas Brady & Co., 1547 Broadway, New York City.

The Directors of the Centre County Association in Philadelphia held a meeting on Monday of last week and decided to hold the annual basket picnic on June 19th, which is the third Saturday in June, instead of the fourth Saturday, as heretofore. The Association, writes Secretary Beale, is much interested in the coming Old Home Week in Bellefonte and a committee consisting of Ira D. Garman, Charles R. Kurtz, Dr. S. Gray Mattern and Dr. John C. C. Beale met with the Philadelphia City Councils sub committee and made a plea to have the Liberty Bell stop at Bellefonte while on its trip to the Panama Exposition in California. While the chances may not be greatly in favor of accomplishing this, nevertheless the Centre Countians in Philadelphia are exerting themselves to the utmost and if they should be successful they will have the pleasure of knowing that they contributed the greatest card thus far proposed for Old Home Week. Letters received by former Centre Countians now residing in distant States tell of plans being made by them to return for Old Home Week. It is expected that many visitors will be here from far western States.

Offers $100 Reward.

$100 reward will be paid by the Central Penna. Forest Fire Protective Association for information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of any person who may set fire to the forests of Centre County.

Mrs. Ball is associate editor of the "National Tribune", in Washington, D. C., and is authority on the subject of the Flag. She is invited to all parts of the country to give this lecture.

So many desecrations are reported to the State Chairman that she feels the need of teaching the masses to respect and revere our Flag.

"Firing the First Gun."

Dr. Banks is one of a dozen men now touring Pennsylvania, and "firing the first gun" in the campaign for the next Legislature. The meetings which are being held elsewhere are backed by an aroused, determined citizenship, which is only waiting a chance to send to Harrisburg representatives who will represent some people other than the few liquor dealers. And in such counties as Centre, where an election of Judge is one of the issues, they are beginning to bestir themselves to find men who will faithfully interpret and apply the laws. Dr. Banks will fire the first gun in this county. There will be no admission charged. Any one can get in can see and hear him.

LEGISLATURE IN RUSH TO ADJOURN MAY 20TH

Revenue and Appropriations Have Right of Way.

COAL TAX BILL PASSED

Legislature Puts Through Measure Placing on Counties Cost of Primary Elections—General Appropriation Bill is Passed.

The Pennsylvania Legislature will adjourn its sessions at Harrisburg one week from today. Governor Brumbaugh and leaders of the Senate and House were in conference yesterday and after going over a schedule of pending legislation it was figured out that final adjournment need not be delayed longer than May 20th. The closing days of the Legislature will witness the usual rush to get bills through, some of the most important being still on the calendar.

The General Appropriation bill was passed in the House yesterday with but one dissenting vote. It carries appropriations amounting to $32,497,406 principally for maintenance of State institutions for the next two years.

Revenue producing bills have occupied the attention of both branches of the Legislature in the closing days of the session. Final passage has been accorded the coal tax bill which it is calculated will yield the State $2,500,000 a year. Another revenue producer to pass finally was the escheat bill which permits the State to take over property unclaimed for seventeen years. This is expected to yield $1,000,000 a year. Another to pass finally was the bill taking from the State and placing upon counties the cost of holding primary elections. This relieves the State of an annual expense of about $3,500,000 and distributes it among the several counties.

The Legislature has killed the proposed revision of the Constitution but has provided for a constitutional commission to consider the subject of general revision.

To Distribute Flag Laws.

Miss Overton received word on Tuesday from Hon. H. B. Scott, Representative from Centre County to the effect that Governor Brumbaugh had signed the Flag Resolution, which means that the Legislature will print 50,000 copies of the Penna. Flag Law for distribution.

The Senate will take 10,000, the House 10,000 and the remaining 30,000 will be given to the Penna. Daughters of the American Revolution to further their work along the line of protecting the U. S. flag.

To Mr. Scott belongs the credit of the passage of this resolution. He was enthusiastically interested in it from the time that Miss Overton appealed to him for his services in its behalf, and followed it until the Governor signed it.

The D. A. R. deeply appreciates this assistance because of the good that will result from it.

NATION MOURNS GREAT SEA HORROR OF THE WAR

About 140 Americans Lost When the Lusitania Was Torpedoed by German Submarine.

No Warning Given to Ill Fated Craft by the Attackers.

Captain Criticises Failure of British Warships to Protect Liner.

The nation is recovering slowly from the shock and horror caused by the sinking of the steamship Lusitania of the Cunard line, off the Irish coast, a few miles outside of Queenstown harbor. The loss of more than 1,400 lives, about 140 of whom were American men, women and children, and all of whom were noncombatants, has caused one of the greatest sensations of modern times. The submarine which caused the catastrophe is believed to be one of the powerful U class craft, which are held responsible for the loss of the steamship Falaba and other passenger and freight ships in British waters.

The suddenness of the attack is held responsible for the terrific loss of life, as the deadly missiles came without warning while the passengers were dining, and the Lusitania disappeared beneath the waves within fifteen minutes.

What Survivors Say.

Survivors say that the first torpedo struck the hull of the ship directly in the space occupied by the engine room.

CAPTAIN TURNER AND SALOON OF VESSEL.

The second hit her cargo section, and is thought to have exploded an enormous quantity of ammunition said to have been stored there. At any rate, several explosions occurred as the steamer listed and sank bow first.

Survivors united in declaring no warning was given. So desperate were conditions that only ten lifeboats could be launched. Indescribable scenes were enacted as the helpless passengers struggled for their lives in the sea.

The official British press bureau in London gave out the following report from the admiral in command at Queenstown:

"The torpedo boats, tugs and armed trawlers which went to the rescue of the Lusitania passengers from Queenstown are all in, with the exception of the Heron.

Few First Class Passengers Saved.

"Only a few of the first class passengers were saved. It is understood that they thought the ship would float. She sank in from fifteen to twenty-five minutes.

"It is reported that she was struck by two torpedoes.

"The Cunard agent gives 2,160 as the total number aboard.

"The Cunard company reported the nationalities of the passengers as follows: Saloon—British, 179; American, 106; Greek, 3; Swede, 1; Mexican, 1; Swiss, 1. Second class—British, 521; American, 65; Russian, 3; Belgian, 1; Hollanders, 3; French, 5; Italian, 1; unknown, 2.

"In the steerage there are said to have been thirteen Americans.

The tragedy took place about ten miles off the Old Head of Kinsale. As soon as the Lusitania's wireless call for assistance was received at Queenstown Admiral Coke, in command of the naval station, dispatched to the scene all assistance available.

The tugs Warrior, Stormcock and Julia, together with five trawlers and the local lifeboat in tow of a tug, were hurried out to sea.

Weather conditions aided in the work of rescue, but the suddenness with which the liner plunged to the bottom of St. George's channel made it impossible to get off all on board.

From the reports thus far received, officers and crew acted with the utmost bravery. In the greatest sea disaster since the sinking of the Titanic they went expeditiously about their task of getting as many as possible of the passengers away before the inevitable moment when the great hulk they trod must make its final dive to destruction.

Meanwhile aid had started from a dozen directions, and soon the boats were picked up by steam vessels and smaller craft. But before this happened the stricken liner, with so many human souls still aboard, had gone down.

It is known that among so many victims there are many Americans, and in the view of those in authority here the death of these presents to the United States the greatest problem she has faced during the present war.

Bodies Brought Ashore.

One hundred bodies were brought ashore at Queenstown on the Cunard wharf from the rescue tug Stormcock and other steamers, which brought over 600 survivors. It is stated that these persons died of exhaustion while on their way to Queenstown from the scene of the disaster. The bodies were removed to the town hall.

When the survivors reached the wharves doctors and ambulances were waiting, and pitiful scenes were witnessed there. There was a large proportion of women among the arrivals. Their clothes were soaked with water. They were hatless and shoeless, and many were unable to walk.

Most of the survivors had suffered severe injuries to their legs and other parts of their bodies, and many had to be placed upon stretchers and removed to the quarters which had been specially prepared for them.

What the Captain Says.

Captain William T. Turner of the Lusitania expressed no fear for the safety of his ship when he sailed from New York.

"I wonder what the Germans will do next?' was his only comment when he read the advertisement sent out by the German embassy, warning Americans that they sailed at "their own risk" on British ships, which were liable to destruction in the war zone.

When Captain Turner was questioned regarding the ship being met off the Irish coast by British torpedo destroyers he replied:

"The admiralty never trouble to send out to meet the Lusitania. They only look after the ships that are bringing the big guns over, like the Orduna and the Transylvania, last voyage. On the last eastward trip I never saw a warship until we reached Liverpool."

One of the Cunard officers who was on the Lusitania on her last voyage, confirmed Captain Turner's statement that the liner had not sighted a single warship on her voyage.

Captain Turner stood at his post on the bridge until his ship went down and was rescued three hours afterward wearing a life belt, according to D. A. Thomas, the Cardiff (Wales) coal magnate.

"Our course was shaped for shore immediately after the torpedo struck," he said. "There is a difference of opinion as to whether the steamship was struck by more than one torpedo, but I heard only one."

PRESIDENT WILSON IN SERIOUS SITUATION.

A dispatch from Washington says:

Grave fears are felt by the administration that the torpedoing of the Lusitania will lead to a wave of anti-German feeling that will sweep the country. President Wilson thus far has managed to keep public opinion well within bounds, and the sporadic evidences of pro-allies' feeling have not been serious. The next few days are certain to be anxious ones for the White House, for they will show whether the American people will keep their balance or become partisans in their resentment.

The fact that many Americans were known to the Germans to be aboard the Lusitania is calculated to excite the populace, it is feared. The sinking of the ship without warning to the unfortunate passengers and crew, it is pointed out, does not leave a good impression and tends to the belief that the kaiser's government holds America and Americans in cool contempt.

WATCHED TORPEDO AS IT STRUCK SHIP.

Ernest Cowper, Toronto Writer, Describes Attack, Seen From Deck.

A sharp look out for submarines was kept aboard the Lusitania as she approached the Irish coast, according to Ernest Cowper, a Toronto newspaper man, who was among the survivors landed at Queenstown.

He said that after the ship was torpedoed there was no panic among the crew, but that they went about the work of getting passengers into the boats in a prompt and efficient manner.

"As we neared the coast of Ireland," said Mr. Cowper, "we all joined in the lookout, for a possible attack by a submarine was the sole topic of conversation.

"I was chatting with a friend at the rail about 2 o'clock when suddenly I caught a glimpse of the conning tower of a submarine about 1,000 yards distant. I immediately called my friend's attention to it. Immediately we both saw the track of a torpedo followed almost instantly by an explosion. Portions of splintered hull were sent flying into the air, and then another torpedo struck. The ship began to list to starboard.

"The crew at once proceeded to get the passengers into boats in an orderly, prompt and efficient manner. Miss Helen Smith appealed to me to save her. I placed her in a boat and saw her safely away. I got into one of the last boats to leave.

"Some of the boats could not be launched, as the vessel was sinking. There was a large number of women and children in the second cabin. Forty of the children were less than a year old."

From interviews with passengers it appears that when the torpedoes burst they sent forth suffocating fumes.

Tobacco.

The filthiness of the tobacco habit is well known; the expensiveness of the tobacco habit is felt by all users; that it is very detrimental to health is being generally admitted, yet very few have any idea of the full extent to which this poison is working the injury of the race.

The two virulent diseases which physicians are agreed upon as growing out of its use, demands attention. One disease, known as cancer of the mouth, carried off General Grant, as well as numerous others. The other is called the tobacco heart. Recent examinations of young men for entrance to military schools has developed the fact that the majority of young men who are habitual cigarette smokers are unfit for service because of this disease.

Nor does the evil stop with disease. The dailies are reporting deaths here and there quite frequently of cigarette-smokers. The extent to which the cigarette evil prevails all over the country is alarmingly frightful. Boys from six years upward are to be seen smoking cigarettes every hour of the day, not smoking occasionally for sport but habitually. Such unfortunate creatures will never be worth ten cents a dozen if they grow up to be men. The effects of the use of tobacco is not the only evil. Tobacco is the twin sister of rum, and is creating an appetite for liquor in the young in two ways. Naturally the narcotic used in youth would lead to a craving for something stronger as the victim grows older, but added to this natural tendency of the narcotic is alcohol in the cigar itself, which alone would produce an appetite for strong drink. All forms of tobacco are drugged heavily with rum, large quantities of liquor being used every year by tobacco manufacturers in flavoring their products.

If the cigarette were to confine its operations to the dude element of society alone it might be tolerated, but such is not the case. It has invaded our schools and colleges and taken prisoners the flower of our land and the hope of the nation. The boys in most instances know no better, they think it is the proper thing to do, and therefore do it, regardless of the pleadings of their parents, and the advice of their teachers, and in the face of horrible examples. The boys are not the only ones addicted to this suicidal habit, but girls in many instances indulge in taking a whiff on the sly. The worst effects of cigarette smoking are found among the young. Prominent physicians who have given the matter some attention, say that they know that it checks physical development, retards growth, impairs the nervous system, dulls the mind, and, indirectly at least, leads to early decay and death. Furthermore, they have found that not a few of their lady patients who complain of general debility, nervousness and loss of flesh are in the habit of smoking cigarettes on the sly. The excessive use of tobacco in any form cannot help being more or less harmful. That it deranges the stomach is evident from the number of well-defined cases of delirium tremens caused by it, to say nothing of the various other nervous derangements. The moderate use it, while rarely ever beneficial, may not be positively harmful. It apparently affords a great deal of satisfaction to those who have become used to it. Yet it must be admitted that smoking fouls the breath, is detrimental to the sense of taste, vitiates the atmosphere of a room, and entails unnecessary expense. It is a fact, however, that chewing is more filthy than smoking, but not as expensive. Physicians disagree as to which is the more harmful. That the excessive use of tobacco will cause insanity is doubtless true, yet the probabilities are that in many cases, where it has been assigned as the cause of insanity, its excessive use has been prompted or induced by a morbid condition of the nervous system, which would have eventually led to the same result. The habits of smoking, chewing, and snuffing tobacco have become so universally prevalent, and their effects on the body and mind so obviously injurious, that all good people wielding influence should feel it to be their duty to do all in their power to speedily remove this barrier to physical reform and improvement. Indeed, it is conceded by leading physicians that these narcotics are superlatively dangerous and greatly destructive to the constitution.

This poison, so much used in various ways, has the most deleterious effects on the system. Although one of the most virulent poisons in nature, such is the fascinating influence of this noxious weed, that mankind resorts to it in every mode that can be devised to insure its stupifying and pernicious agency. Very many repent sincerely that they have ever indulged in this slow, but sure, poison, which in many constitutions, leads to such fatal consequences; and could we draw back the covering of the tomb, and know what tobacco has done in shortening human life, it would surprise us that man, that image of his Maker, endowed with reason, should have consented to thus destroy himself both mentally and physically. With what propriety may we apply to this subject the language which is often used in reference to spiritous liquors? What organ in the human body needs these narcotic poisons in order to perform its functions in a more perfect manner? There is not one! God has made none; nor is there an organ whose healthy action is not disturbed by the use of tobacco, and which it does not instantly reject to every organ it touches, tobacco is poison. Tobacco has spoiled and utterly ruined thousands of boys; inducing a dangerous precocity, developing the passions, softening and weakening the bones, and greatly injuring the spinal marrow, and brain, and the whole nervous fluid. A boy who early and freely smokes, or otherwise largely uses tobacco, never is known to make a man of much energy or character, and generally lacks physical and muscular, as well as mental energy. With very few exceptions, every drunkard is a tobacco chewer, for the hankering for the one usually leads to the other, and step by step, sooner or later, these stimulants destroy the health—physical, moral, and intellectual. Boys take heed and stop and think before it's to late.

LEGISLATURE IS NEARING THE END

Next Week Expected to Mark Close of 1915 Session.

WORKING ON COMPENSATION

Proposed Law Is In Hands of Senator Crow—He Wants the Rights of Everybody Protected—Moving Picture Censor Bill, Cold Storage Repealer and Lawyer-Protection Law Features of Harrisburg Doings.

Harrisburg, May 11. — With the workmen's compensation act as the single piece of big legislation still to be disposed of and the prospect of it passing in satisfactory shape exceedingly encouraging, the legislature may now be said to be working on the second section of the last lap. Unless every sign goes awry it should adjourn finally next week.

Senator Crow, chairman of the senate corporation committee, is putting the finishing touches to the workmen's compensation law. He and the governor agree on its main provisions, and any changes that may be made in the bill as it passed the house is expected to meet with little opposition.

Though recognizing the necessity of a real compensation act, one that will be enforceable to the letter, Senator Crow, at the same time, is anxious that no injustice be done to the employer. Manufacturers, farmers and small employers have rights that must be respected by the legislature and, in the opinion of Senator Crow, it will not do to put through a compensation law that will tend to break down industries and cause apprehension in the minds of agriculturists and others who are compelled to engage help in the operation of their business.

REP. DAVID W. THOMAS.
He Fathered Bill to Protect Lawyers In Securing Their Fees.

A bill that has made glad the hearts of most lawyers in Pennsylvania has been signed by Governor Brumbaugh. it provides that no corporation against which a suit for damage has been brought may settle with the client behind the back of the plaintiff's attorney. In other words, it protects the lawyer in his fee.

This bill was introduced in the house by Representative David Thomas, of Wilkes-Barre, who, by the way, is not an attorney at all, but a detective. Thomas says that it is just as wrong to cheat a lawyer as a grocer, a dry goods merchant or a huckster; that the new law is aimed against claim agents who surreptitiously sneak around to a client, lay out a cash settlement and secure a release. Sometimes the client is done a great injustice and the lawyer even a greater one, for he gets absolutely nothing for the trouble and expense he is put to in bringing the suit.

The new moving picture censor bill that passed both houses after considerable difficulty will do much to increase the efficiency of the act of 1911, under which the first board was created. Instead of two censors, the new act calls for three, to be paid salaries of $3000, $2500 and $2400 respectively.

According to the bill the cost of examining each film, reel or set of views is $1, which is $2 less than under the old act. For each duplicate an additional $1 will be collected. All the fees are to be turned into the state treasury.

Any member of the board, or any employe, is empowered to prevent the display of any reel or view not approved by the board. Any person violating the act and convicted before any magistrate, alderman or justice shall be fined not less than $25 nor more than $50 for the first offense. For subsequent offenses the fine shall be not less than $50 nor more than $100. In default of payment, the defendant shall be committed to prison for not less than ten days nor more than thirty days.

By a vote of 114 to 74 the house last week passed the Clark bill to repeal the cold storage act of 1913. As the senate put through the same measure six weeks ago, with only eight votes in the negative, it now goes to the governor. The latter will either approve the repealer, or sign a uniform cold storage act approved by the uniform legislation commission, which will, in effect, accomplish the same object—wipe from the statute books the unpopular 1913 law.

It was stated on the floor of the house that the legislature of Pennsylvania never passed an act more iniquitous than the 1913 cold storage law. Every person who has had experience with it has found that it protects and benefits the big packers of Chicago and the cold storage houses of New York, New Jersey and Delaware, while injuring the interest of the consumer, grocer, farmer and commission merchant in Pennsylvania.

There is little likelihood of the bill drawn to remedy some of the defects in the third class city commission government act passing this legislature. Shortly after the bill was introduced it was amended by the senate committee so as to eliminate from the present act the non-partisan election feature. This amendment is so bitterly opposed by senators representing a number of third class cities that the probability is that the bill will be defeated rather than permit it to go through with the non-partisan ballot wiped out.

GO RIGHT AT IT

Friends and Neighbors in Bellefonte Will Show You a Way.

Get at the root of the trouble.

Rubbing an aching back may relieve it,

But won't cure it if the kidneys are weak.

You must reach the root of it—the kidneys.

Doan's Kidney Pills go right at it:

Reach the cause; attack the pain.

Are recommended by many Bellefonte people.

William Woods, carpenter, High St., Bellefonte, says: "A year ago this spring, I strained myself by heavy lifting and that started my loins and I had to lay off for the day. I at once took Doan's Kidney Pills, as they had been recommended to me by others who had had experience with them and less than one box rid me of the attack. I have not had any trouble from my back since. It is a pleasure for me to testify to the merit of Doan's Kidney Pills. I have not missed a day's work since."

KEEPING FAITH WITH ELECTORS

Passage of Child Labor Bill Carries Out Promise.

PLEDGED IN G. O. P. PLATFORM

Republican State Committee Gave People Assurance of Such a Law, and Its Enactment Reflects Credit Upon Party—Mothers' Pension Increased Appropriation Is Another Pledge That Is Being Lived Up To.

Harrisburg, May 11.—In the passage of the child labor law through the legislature the Republican party must be credited with adding another chapter to its pledge-keeping book. The Republican state committee at the Pittsburgh meeting in September, 1914, promised to enact a child labor bill satisfactory to the associations advocating shorter hours for minors.

This promise was fulfilled when the general assembly, composed as it is of 202 Republicans out of a total membership of 257, put through the Cox bill.

Though manufacturers attack the measure as unjust and do not hesitate to mince words in reciting how votes were gotten in support of it, the belief prevails among disinterested people that the law will not work the hardships anticipated by the owners of industries. There will be some difficulty in the beginning, but as soon as the readjustment period passes the defects will probably be ironed out.

It is pointed out by proponents of the Cox bill that the Massachusetts child labor law, after which it is patterned, disturbed business in that state for only a short time; that at present everybody has adjusted himself to the new conditions and the statute is doing a lot of real good in providing education to children who previous to its passage were compelled to work continually without a thought of mental improvement.

The Pennsylvania law calls for fifty-one hours a week for children between fourteen and sixteen years, with one day off for vocational education. This is in effect a forty-three-hour measure.

Manufacturers claim that under the new law they cannot afford to employ any children at all under sixteen year of age, and that these minors will have to make way for older persons, who are allowed to work fifty-four hours a week. A recent statement from a Reading manufacturer says in connection with the new law: "There is only one redeeming feature in the new act, and that is its absurdity is so marked, the motives behind it are so clear, the means used to jam it through were so contemptible and the crime—social and economic—of its enforcement will be so vast, that it will serve as its own antidote."

The law takes effect next January, and as but one year will elapse from that time till the next meeting of the legislature, it can very easily be repealed, if it is found to work as much wickedness as predicted by the manufacturers. A trial of twelve months cannot do very much harm.

Senator Charles A. Snyder led the fight against the bill in the upper branch. He ridiculed the idea that children are being crushed by the wheels of industries in Pennsylvania and dwelt at length upon the fact that the people whom the law affects most—poor people—are not asking for it.

The bill was defended by Senators Vare, Hilton, McNichol and others. They stated that the proposed law is feasible in every particular and in the long run will be found to be doing the greatest good for the greatest number.

In connection with the child labor law the fear expressed in many quarters that its operation may handicap widows, who are depending upon their children's earnings for support. It might be stated that the legislature is going to set aside a mothers' pension fund of at least $400,000. This is twice as much as appropriated two years ago. As every dollar of this amount must be met with another dollar from the respective counties through which it is distributed, the appropriation really means that for the coming two years $800,000 will be paid out to widowed mothers. There is a possibility of even more than $400,000 being appropriated, and it would not be surprising if the total that goes into the fund—state and county appropriations—will be nearer $1,000,000 than $800,000.

It is gratifying to know that this mothers' pension increase was also one of the planks of the last Republican platform. That the party was able to successfully underwrite an action of this kind, which means so much in reducing poverty in these Democratic days, is a source of much satisfaction to say the least.

At this writing it looks as if the close of the legislature will find that every pledge in the last Republican platform has been kept to the very letter. This will be an achievement of great importance to the G. O. P., and will prove a complete refutation of the statement made during last fall's campaign that the platform was prepared merely for the candidates to run upon rather than as an instrument to be carried out by the party.

Why is it that reform looks good when a man's out of office?

When a man has patience he generally has a wife to cultivate it.

Bury your dead hopes, but don't waste too much time at the funeral.

According to Kitchener, the war's going to begin almost any time now.

No, that tired feeling is not Spring fever, when it lasts all the year 'round.

While Taft has lost in weight, it is said he is still possessed with that ever-lasting smile.

And some-times those who rush in where Angels fear to treat really get away with it.

One way to shorten the time while waiting for something to turn up is to turn something up.

As a rule, some men would treat themselves better if they didn't treat their friends so frequently.

The drawback about a row in the family is that the row is liable to last longer than the family.

The money that Jess Willard, the prize fighter, earned at Havana is coming to him on the deferred payment plan.

The women's peace conference at The Hague is over, but the men's work for peace is still going on in the trenches.

Its an awful surprise for a "young blood" to discover that his wife isn't as easy with him as his mother used to be.

Now is the ripe time for some enterprising historian to write the Rise and Fall of the Chinese Republic.

When it comes to a scrap between China and Japan, California is one little old state that's strictly neutral. She wouldn't worry if both were whipped.

Germany wants American tourists to keep out of the danger zone, and Dr. Dernberg says Germany wants a neutral sea. Germany seemingly isn't breaking anything in her mad rush to neutralize the section of the sea that's open to her.

The British clergyman who says he tried to swear off and "found his health seriously impaired thereby" might have observed that his will power was likewise somewhat impaired by the unusual exertion. As a rule, there's only one way to swear off—that is to simply quit.

If the British government gets any measure of prohibition, even so much as an increase in the tax on liquor, the government will have to fight for it. What is more, the fight if fairly started may break down the political truce which was called at the outbreak of the war for the union of all parties in support of the war policy. Nothing could show the difference between the British and American attitude on the liquor question more plainly than this incident. Prohibition here has made remarkable gains in the South and Middle-West. But Englishmen will fight for the right to drink even though the fight may imperil to some extent the successful prosecution of the war. They need something more than the Evangelist Sunday. They need a Hobson.

Reports of the women's peace conference at The Hague reveal the secret of such harmony as prevails there, though the harmony may not always be complete. Those good women can unite on a peace program for the simple reason that nobody is bound by anything they propose. But if they actually spoke for the nations they represent, if they were bringing their countries to abide by the proposals they put forward, the meeting, had it ever been called, would have broken up before this to wait for the close of hostilities. For what they are trying to express has already been attempted by the statesmen of the world. Some agreements were entered into at The Hague, but they are brushed aside just as international law or the neutral rights of inferior nations have been pushed away whenever it has suited the purposes of the warring powers to ignore them. Public opinion can do little toward peace until the strength of a nation is vanished or is victorious.

There have been three noteworthy phases of the war thus far. The first was marked by the check to the German advance at Marne; the second saw the fall of Antwerp and the German sweep to the sea; the third came with the fall of Przemysl. Now a fourth chapter is being written in the attack on the Dardanelles. It looked for a time as though the fourth installment of the great world epic would be written in the Carpathians, but thus far Russia has been checked there, and Hungary is safe from invasion. If the Dardanelles are opened, Russian ports are free from the export of grain and the import of war munitions of which Russia presumably stands in need and territory is at hand for any bargaining the Allies may do with the Balkan States. With Turkey out of the fight, and Italy, Greece and Rumania in, the balance would be shifted so heavily in favor of the Allies that the outcome of the war despite the defensive power of Germany and Austria, could hardly be in doubt. The fate of the Dardanelles may very well determine the outcome of the war.

A GRAVE CRISIS.

It is simply distressing. Not since the the destruction of the battleship Maine in Havana harbor have the American people faced such a crisis as confronts them at this moment. The sinking of the Lusitania by a German submarine is not an act of war. It is piratical murder Wars are not won by the slaughter of defenseless women and children and the killing of non-combatant neutrals. The bombardment of undefended cities is not war. The deliberate sinking of merchant vessels and the killing of innocent passengers is not war. It is an act of piracy, unjustified by any rule or usage or civilized warfare and abhorrent to every instinct of honorable combat. This is the third time that American lives have been taken by German submarines. One American passenger went down on the British merchantman Falaba. Three lives were lost in the sinking of the American steamer Gulflight. And now comes this deliberate and outrageous disregard of the established rules of war which results in the killing of scores of American citizens.

Germany will, of course, seek to maintain that the Lusitania carried mounted guns and was, by reason of that fact, a war ship and not a merchant vessel. It will be impossible to make the American people accept such a plea. This is no time to interpose a technical quibble as justification for a wanton and murderous outrage. The English naval authorites assert that the Lusitania was not armed. This occurrence is too serious for hasty action by the United States Government. We must first have the facts officially confirmed. We must act. We have refused to recognize the war zone proclaimed by Germany on the high seas.

We have refused to recognize her right to disregard the rules of war which safeguard the interests of neutral nations. The issue must now be joined. If Germany admits the facts in the present case, and openly refuses to grant our demands, this government will be forced to recognize Germany's attitude as one of deliberate hostility. And, if we cannot rely upon Germany to protect the rights of our citizens on the high seas, we shall ourselves be compelled to take steps to protect those rights against any power that threatens us.

The Character of the Man.

There are few men who are so abuntantly endowed with magnetism as is Theodore Roosevelt. It is claimed that he compares favorably in this respect with the late lamented Spurgon and Henry Ward Beecher. Few men of the present generation have exerted such an influence upon the young men of this nation as Theodore Roosevelt. He has been the admiration of a vast army of the young and rising element. Active, fearless, dominant, and ardent advocate of sport and outdoor life, a reader and writer of good books, and above all a preacher of the virtues young men prize, honesty and courage and contempt for shams, he has been a natural leader of young men. And now in this long drawn out trial into which he has been drawn this man is being shown up as something quite different from anything he ever allowed himself to appear before. He hasn't a a doubt of his own righteousness. But he is shown to have done things that would have downed any other public man, and would have ruined his own reputation if he had confessed them at the time. His contempt for Hughes was known to a few. It was known to many that he played with Platt and the other bosses. But if the truth had been known to the multitude, as it is known today, his influence would have been gone, his power to inspire young men with an ideal of honesty and courage would have been destroyed. For the young men of this country have a higher ideal than Roosevelt has ex-emplified in his political career. True they are easily carried away by success. They do admire a clever man who, as they say, can get away with it, but back of all that, they do honestly believe in the ideals that Roosevelt preached. And they see him now, with his personal integrity unchallenged, his patriotism, unquestioned, with his belief in himself undimmed, condemned before them by the very ideals he taught them to respect.

And it will be strange indeed if the more thoughtful of the young men of the nation do not turn against Roosevelt himself with something of the contempt he always expressed for the man who had been exposed as a political sham. Mr. Roosevelt has a weakness of advocating his own righteousness. In fact he has too much to say on this point. In his sermon on the mount, Christ said to his disciples, and to the multitude "For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharises, ye shall in no case enter into the Kingdom of Heaven." Matt: 5:20, and again Roman 10:3—"For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God." Some peoples own natural or acquired righteousness must be acknowledged to be but filthy rags. Then what will be the condition of the man who looks at his own good works with complacency, and who thinks to atone for his shortcomings by his own good deeds? He is simply trying to cover one filthy, ragged garment by putting on some more filthy rags. Instead of making himself better, he is in a worse plight.

NEW FISH CODE

Provisions of Measure Prepared for the Legislature.

By a compromise supported by the element which desires to continue Sunday fishing in the boundary waters of the state the Sunday observance and advocates succeeded last week in having the Senate Committee on Fish and Game at Harrisburg insert in the new fish code the old provision which imposes a special fine of $25 on those who fish in the inland waters of the state on Sunday. Other minor amendments also were made by the committee, but these were with the consent of the representatives of the sportsmen's associations and repaired defects in the bill.

The sportsmen had desired to have the Sunday question treated in a separate measure which would have applied to all the waters of the state alike and such a measure had been passed by the House and was before the Senate committee, but Sundsy observancé principle was sacrificed as far as the boundary waters are concerned and the prohibition applied only to fishing in inland waters. Moreover to forestall any attempt to question the legality of such discriminatory provision the Sunday fishing prohibition clause was tacked on as a part of the most important section in the code despite the opposition of the sportsmen, instead of being allowed to stand in a separate section.

The new code classifies the game, food and bait fishes of the commonwealth and provides that game fish may be taken only with rod, hook and line, with not more than three hooks to each line during the open seasons. Bait fish may be taken at any time with hook and line, or with minnow traps or dip nets not over three feet square, and food fish may be taken with hook and line and outline at any time of the year. All other methods of taking fish from the public waters are forbidden.

The trout season is left as it is but the size limit is abolished and a creel limit of 40 is established, it being made illegal to return to the water any trout that has been hooked.

The season for other game is from June 15 to December 31, inclusive, and size limits are established as follows:

White bass, rock bass, grapple or calico bass, six inches; small-mouth, large-mouth, yellow bass, striped bass, rock fish, lake or salmon trout, nine inches; blue pike, eight inches; walleyed pike or Susquehanna salmon, pickeral, 12 inches; muscallonge or Western pike, 24 inches; sturgeon five feet.

The creel limits established are as follows:

In possession at one time 12 large or small mouth bass, 26 rock bass, white bass, calico bass, crapple, pickeral, blue pike or pike perch, four muscallonge or Western pike, 50 sun fish.

The only fishing with nets in the inland waters will be in tidal streams or in the Susquehanna below McCalls Ferry Dam. Improved provisions are included to govern dams and fishways and inlet pipes and better regulations and larger powers for commercial hatcheries. The sale of game fish, excepting lake trout, blue pike, pike perch or wall-eyed pike, is prohibited except by licensed hatcheries.

The pollution section is a repetition of the existing law.

The Commissioner of Fisheries is given power to distribute fish to the streams on forest reserve lands, to the public schools and educational institutions and to individuals for planting in streams the banks of which are subject to private ownership, on the written application of one or more of the owners or lawful occupants of such lands if the waters are suitable and if the applicants will agree to permit lawful fishing in said waters by the public the persons fishing being liable for any and all damage done, and also to distribute fish to waters where adjoining land owners are non-residents or who by habit or custom have permitted the public to fish therein.

The commissioner also is empowered to make plantings when he deems wise in waters for which no application is made.

It is made unlawful to apply for fish if the applicant prohibits or prevents fishing by the public in water flowing over his land and the obtaining of fish by false representations is made punishable. The Commissioner of Fisheries is given power to designate nursery streams in which all fishing shall be prohibited after public notice in at least two papers in the county and after the posting of notices at the outlet and at intervals of 300 yards along said streams. Violation of the sanctuary of a nursery stream calls for a fine of $100.

A trout stream is defined as one in which trout are commonly fished for and caught, whether through stocking or whether native to such stream.

The Commissioner of Fisheries is given power to appoint 30 wardens at salaries of $80 a month and to appoint deputies or special fish wardens on request of fish protective associations or individuals owning or leasing waters, who shall serve without compensation unless detailed in writing to specific duties, when a diem allowance may be provided. The terms of all such deputies expire on May 31 of each year.

Outlines are permitted from June 30 to December 1 for the capture of carp, suckers, mullet and eels, only, but they must be anchored at both ends, sunk to the bottom, baited with dead bait only, no person being permitted to use more than three outlines with a total of 100 hooks. All outlines must be baited only between the hours of 5 o'clock p. m. and 7 o'clock a. m. If the owner is not present during their operation, a metallic tag bearing his name and address must be attached to each line.

No outlines are permitted in trout streams at any time.

A LIVING TORPEDO.

That Odd Fish, the Electric Ray, Is a Terror In His Own Way.

There is a queer fish, bearing the name torpedo, that in its own peculiar way is a good deal of a terror. This is the torpedo, or electric ray, a dweller in the southern seas, which grows to a large size, sometimes weighing seventy or eighty pounds. This peculiar fish has a nearly circular body, a short tail and a very small mouth.

The back is brownish in color, and the underneath parts are white.

The torpedo obtains its name from its power of giving a violent shock, similar to an electric shock, to anything with which it comes in contact. Whenever an enemy approaches the fish emits from its body a kind of electricity, which incapacitates the attacker immediately.

In capturing its food the torpedo finds this power of use. Being very inactive, it cannot pursue the small fish which form its diet, so it lies in wait until they swim close by and then throws out its powerful shock, which instantly renders them helpless.

If a person touches this strange fish he is attacked by cramp, which affects the stomach, producing a kind of convulsion. For this reason the torpedo is sometimes known as the "cramp fish."—London Answers.

THE YELLOW FLAG.

A Ruse That Once Saved a British Ship From Capture.

An effective ruse de guerre in the way of flag flying was that practiced in the Mediterranean at the beginning of the last century by Lord Dundonald while cruising in the British ship Speedy. This little brig had captured so many of the enemy's merchantmen that a Spanish frigate was specially fitted out, disguised as a merchantman, to bring her to book.

Dundonald, in order to deceive the merchant craft of the enemy, adopted similar tactics and disguised the Speedy as a Danish merchant brig. The two disguised boats soon sighted each other. Dundonald at once gave chase and discovered his mistake when the Spaniard suddenly revealed her true nature and started lowering a boat to examine the Speedy's papers.

But Dundonald was equal to the occasion. He hoisted the yellow flag—signal of sickness. And when the Spanish boat was within hail an English officer in Danish uniform shouted that they were only two days out of Algiers. As the plague was raging in Algiers, the ruse was completely successful.—London Chronicle.

SMART COAT.

High Waisted and With a Flaring Skirt Is Girl's Garment.

ATTRACTIVE COAT FOR YOUNG GIRL.

The twelve-year-old girl will find this coat very much to her liking. It is high waisted, with a wide belt of the same material and a covered buckle of blue moire silk. The collar and cuffs are also of moire silk.

White shoes and stockings are worn with this pretty spring creation, which shows also, as does the companion illustration, the liking this season for black and white.

Worn with this coat is a blue silk and straw hat trimmed with cherries.

HOME DECORATION.

Lace Is Important In House Adornment, So 'Tis Said.

Lace assumes more and more an important place in the domain of home furnishings. It is so important that upholsterers have to employ lacemakers and are obliged to make lace purchases on a considerable scale.

Among other things, pianos and windows are draped with lace.

The renaissance combines with lace of quite modern origin. And combining with all and second to none in fashion or effect is the old fashioned crochet. The present taste for crochet denotes a remarkable revival in this kind of thing.

Another revival besides it and making common cause with house and especially drawing room decorations is the equally old fashioned netting. For long years past this species of handwork has been left almost exclusively to fishermen and their industrious wives.

It served for fishing nets, and that was about all. But now it is coming back as fast as it can to the place it occupied, let us say, a hundred years ago, in the repertoire of fancy work for women.

Then was the time when dainty slipper cased feet were put forward and used in the service of the kind of fancy work known as knitting. Now machinery does a great deal of the work which human fingers, aided by the foot, used to do.

But whether wrought by fingers or machinery, it remains a fact that old fashioned netting is a distinct revival and that its presence in drawing rooms throws an air of fashion around them. The effects of embroidery upon it are now more artistic than of yore, nature as well as pictures often serving as models.

Spider Web Embroidery.

The new spider web embroidery is charming. The webs are used for backgrounds of floral designs, bright colored dragon flies and the like and sometimes stand out alone with only the residing spider upon them. The embroidered webs are alarmingly and delightfully natural, being usually of pale gray. They may be made in any color that you prefer, however, and a beautiful effect can be obtained by such a design in different shades of delft blue, the lightest shade being used for the webs. Spider web embroidery is being used upon luncheon sets, bureau sets and occasionally upon sofa pillows.

FADS AND FANCIES.

Boudoir caps have large bows made of wide ribbon.

Organdie will be a great favorite in cotton materials.

Simplicity is the keynote of the new shirt waist styles.

Dainty muslin collars, berthas and ruffles, recalling the mid-Victorian days, are among novel neckwear for spring.

New crocheted scarfs are being done with irregular patterns which suggest the art nouveau designs that come from Vienna.

The Exploits of Elaine

A Detective Novel and a Motion Picture Drama

By ARTHUR B. REEVE

The Well-Known Novelist and the Creator of the "Craig Kennedy" Stories

Presented in Collaboration With the Pathe Players and the Eclectic Film Company

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company. All Foreign Rights Reserved.

SYNOPSIS.

The New York police are mystified by a series of murders and other crimes. The principal clue to the criminal is the warning letter which is sent the victims, signed with a "clutching hand." The latest victim of the mysterious assassin is Taylor Dodge, the insurance president. His daughter, Elaine, employs Craig Kennedy, the famous scientific detective, to try to unravel the mystery. What Kennedy accomplishes is told by his friend Jameson, a newspaper man. Enraged at the determined effort which Elaine and Craig Kennedy are making to put an end to his crimes, the Clutching Hand, as this strange criminal is known, resorts to all sorts of the most diabolical schemes to put them out of the way. Each chapter of the story tells of a new plot against their lives and of the way the great detective uses all his skill to save this pretty girl and himself from death.

TENTH EPISODE

THE LIFE CURRENT.

Assignments were being given out on the Star one afternoon, and I was standing talking with several other reporters, in the busy hum of typewriters and clicking telegraphs.

"What do you think of that?" asked one of the fellows. "You're something of a scientific detective, aren't you?"

Without laying claim to such a distinction, I took the paper and read:

THE POISONED KISS AGAIN.

Three More New York Women Report Being Kissed by Mysterious Stranger —Later Fell Into Deep Unconsciousness—What Is It?

I had scarcely finished when one of the copy boys, dashing past me, called out: "You're wanted on the wire, Mr. Jameson."

I hurried over to the telephone and answered.

A musical voice responded to my hurried hello, and I hastened to adopt my most polite tone.

"Is this Mr. Jameson?" asked the voice.

"Yes," I replied, not recognizing it.

"Well, Mr. Jameson, I've heard of you on the Star, and I've just had a very strange experience. I've had the poisoned kiss."

The woman did not pause to catch my exclamation of astonishment, but went on: "It was like this. A man ran up to me on the street and kissed me—and—I don't know how it was—but I became unconscious—and I didn't come to for an hour—in a hospital—fortunately. I don't know what would have happened if it hadn't been that someone came to my assistance and the man fled. I thought the Star would be interested."

"We are," I hastened to reply. "Will you give me your name?"

"Why, I am Mrs. Florence Leigh of No. 20 Prospect avenue," returned the voice.

"Say," I exclaimed hurrying over to the editor's desk, "here's another woman on the wire who says she has received the poisoned kiss."

"Suppose you take that assignment," the editor answered, sensing a possible story.

I took it with alacrity, figuring out the quickest way by elevated and surface to reach the address.

I must say that I could scarcely criticize the poisoned kisser's taste, for the woman who opened the door certainly was extraordinarily attractive.

"And you really were—put out by a kiss?" I queried, as she led me into a neat sitting room.

"Absolutely—as much as if it had been by one of these poisoned needles you read about," she replied confidently, hastening on to describe the affair volubly.

It was beyond me.

"May I use your telephone?" I asked.

"Surely," she answered.

I called the laboratory. "Is that you, Craig?" I inquired.

"Yes, Walter," he answered, recognizing my voice.

"Say, Craig," I asked breathlessly, "what sort of kiss would suffocate a person?"

My only answer was an uproarious laugh from him at the idea.

"I know," I persisted, "but I've got the assignment from the Star—and I'm out here interviewing a woman about it. It's all right to laugh—but here I am. I've found a case—names, dates and places. I wish you'd explain the thing, then."

"Oh, all right, Walter," he replied indulgently. "I'll meet you as soon as I can and help you out."

We waited patiently.

The bell rang and the woman hastened to the door, admitting Kennedy.

"Hello, Walter," he greeted.

"This is certainly a most remarkable case, Craig," I said, introducing him, and telling briefly what I had learned.

"And you actually mean to say that a kiss had the effect—"

Just then the telephone interrupted.

"Yes," she reasserted quickly. "Excuse me a second."

She answered the call. "Oh—why—yes, he's here. Do you want to speak to him? Mr. Jameson, it's the Star."

"Confound it!" I exclaimed, "isn't that like the old man—dragging me off this story before it's half finished in order to get another. I'll have to go. I'll get this story from you, Craig."

* * * * * * *

The day before, in the suburban house, the Clutching Hand had been talking to two of his emissaries, an attractive young woman and a man.

They were Flirty Florrie and Dan the Dude.

"Now, I want you to get Kennedy," he said. "The way to do it is to separate Kennedy and Elaine—see?"

"All right, Chief, we'll do it," they replied.

Clutching Hand had scarcely left when Flirty Florrie began by getting published in the papers the story which I had seen.

The next day she called me up from the suburban house. Having got me to promise to see her, she had scarcely turned from the telephone when Dan the Dude walked in from the next room.

"He's coming," she said.

Dan was carrying a huge stag head with a beautifully branched pair of antlers. Under his arm was a coil of wire which he had connected to the inside of the head.

"Fine!" he exclaimed. Then, pointing to the head, he added, "It's all ready. See how I fixed it? That ought to please the Chief.

Dan moved quickly to the mantel and mounted a stepladder there by which he had taken down the head, and started to replace the head above the mantel.

He hooked the head on a nail.

"There," he said, unscrewing one of the beautiful brown glass eyes of the stag.

Back of it could be seen a camera shutter.

"One of those new quick shutter cameras," he explained.

Then he ran a couple of wires along the molding around the room and into a closet, where he made the connection with a sort of switchboard on which a button was marked, "SHUTTER" and the switch, "WIND FILM."

"Now, Flirty," he said, coming out of the closet and pulling up the shade which let a flood of sunlight into the room, "you see, I want you to stand here—then, do your little trick."

Just then the bell rang.

"That must be Jameson," she cried. "Now—get to your corner."

With a last look Dan went into the closet and shut the door.

Perhaps half an hour later Clutching Hand himself called me up on the telephone. It was he—not the Star—as I learned only too late.

* * * * * * *

I had scarcely got out of the house, as Craig told me afterwards, when Flirty Florrie told all over again the embroidered tale that had caught my ear.

Kennedy said nothing, but listened intently, perhaps betraying in his face the skepticism he felt.

"You see," she said, still voluble and eager to convince him, "I was only walking on the street. Here—let me show you. It was just like this."

She took his arm and, before he knew, it, led him to the spot on the floor near the window which Dan had indicated. Meanwhile Dan was listening attentively in his closet.

"Now—stand there. You are just as I was—only I didn't expect anything."

She was pantomiming some one approaching stealthily while Kennedy watched her with interest, tinged with doubt. Behind Craig in his closet, Dan was reaching for the switchboard button.

"You see," she said advancing quickly and acting her words, "he placed his hands on my shoulders—so—then threw his arms about my neck—so!"

She said no more, but imprinted a deep, passionate kiss on Kennedy's mouth, clinging closely to him. Before Kennedy could draw away, Dan in the closet, had pressed the button and the switch several times in rapid succession.

"Th—that's very realistic," gasped Craig, a good deal taken aback by the sudden osculatory assault.

He frowned.

"I—I'll look into the case," he said, backing away. "There—there may be some scientific explanation—but—er"—

He was plainly embarrassed and hastened to make his adieux.

* * * * * * *

How little impression the thing made on Kennedy can be easily seen from the fact that on the way downtown that afternoon he stopped at Martin's, on Fifth avenue, and bought a ring—a very handsome solitaire, the finest Martin had in the shop.

It must have been about the time that he decided to stop at Martin's that the Dodge butler, Jennings, admitted a young lady who presented a card on which was engraved the name

Miss Florence Leigh,
20 Prospect Avenue.

As he handed Elaine the card, she looked up from the book she was reading and took it.

"All right, show her in, Jennings I'll see her."

Elaine moved into the drawing room, Jennings springing forward to part the portieres for her and passing through the room quickly where Flirty Florrie sat waiting. Flirty Florrie rose and stood gazing at Elaine, apparently very much embarrassed, even after Jennings had gone.

"It is embarrassing," she said finally, "but, Miss Dodge, I have come to you to beg for my love."

Elaine looked at her nonplused.

"Yes," she continued, "you do not know it, but Craig Kennedy is infatuated with you." She paused again, then added, "But he is engaged to me."

Elaine stared at the woman. She was dazed. She could not believe it.

"There is the ring," Flirty Florrie added, indicating a very impressive paste diamond.

Quickly she reached into her bag and drew out two photographs, without a word, handing them to Elaine.

"There's the proof," Florrie said simply, choking a sob.

Elaine looked with a start. Sure enough, there was the neat living room in the house on Prospect avenue. In one picture Florrie had her arms over Kennedy's shoulders. In the other, apparently, they were passionately kissing.

Elaine slowly laid the photographs on the table.

"Please—please, Miss Dodge—give me back my lost love. You are rich and beautiful—I am poor. I have only my good looks. But—I—I love him—and he—loves me—and has promised to marry me."

Florrie had broken down completely and was weeping softly into a lace handkerchief.

She moved toward the door. Elaine followed her.

"Jennings—please see the lady to the door."

Back in the drawing-room, Elaine seized the photographs and hurried into the library where she could be alone.

Just then she heard the bell and Kennedy's voice in the hall.

"How are you this afternoon," Kennedy greeted Elaine gayly.

Elaine had been too overcome by what had just happened to throw it off so easily, and received him with studied coolness.

Still, Craig, manlike, did not notice it at once. In fact, he was too busy gazing about to see that neither Jennings, Marie nor the duenna Aunt Josephine were visible. They were not and he quickly took the ring from his pocket. Without waiting, he showed it to Elaine.

Elaine very coolly admired the ring, as Craig might have eyed a specimen on a microscope slide. Still, he did not notice.

He took the ring, about to put it on her finger. Elaine drew away. Concealment was not in her frank nature.

She picked up the two photographs.

"What have you to say about those?" she asked cuttingly.

Kennedy, quite surprised, took them and looked at them. Then he let them fall carelessly on the table and dropped into a chair, his head back in a burst of laughter.

"Why—that was what they put over on Walter," he said. "He called me up early this afternoon—told me he had discovered one of these poisoned kiss cases you have read about in the papers. Think of it—all that to pull a concealed camera! Such an elaborate business—just to get me where they could fake this thing. I suppose they've put someone up to saying she's engaged?"

Elaine was not so lightly affected. "But," she said severely, repressing her emotion, "I don't understand, Mr. Kennedy, how scientific inquiry into 'the poisoned kiss' could necessitate this sort of thing."

She pointed at the photographs accusingly.

"But," he began, trying to explain.

"No buts," she interrupted.

"Then you believe that I—"

"How can you, as a scientist, ask me to doubt the camera?" she insinuated, very coldly turning away.

Kennedy rapidly began to see that it was far more serious than he had at first thought.

"Very well," he said with a touch of impatience, "if my word is not to be taken—I—I'll—"

He had seized his hat and stick.

Elaine did not deign to answer.

Then, without a word, he stalked out of the door.

* * * * * * *

Kennedy was moping in the laboratory the next day when I came in.

"Say, Craig," I began, trying to overcome his fit of blues.

Kennedy, filled with his own thoughts, paid no attention to me. Then he jumped up.

"By George—I will," he muttered.

I poked my head out of the door in time to see him grab up his hat and coat and dash from the room, putting his coat on as he went.

"He's a nut today," I exclaimed to myself.

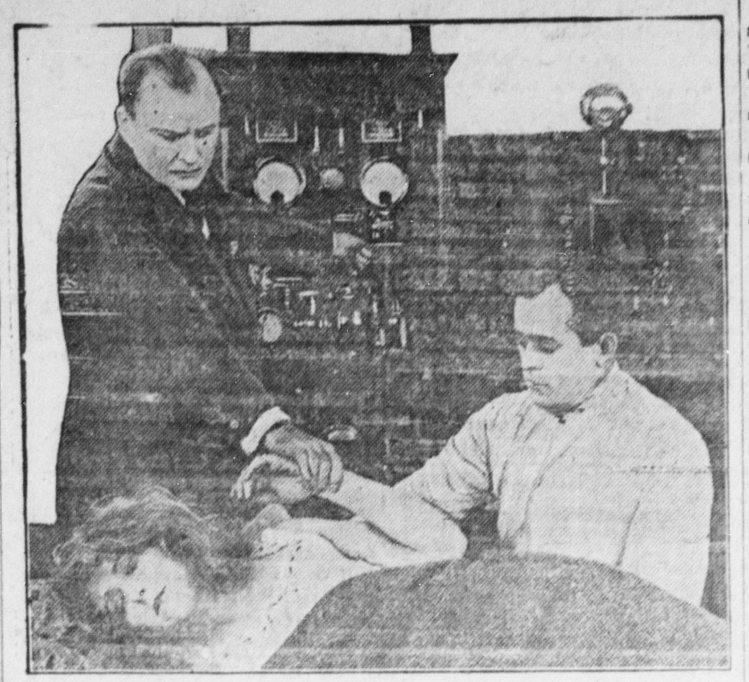
Though I did not know yet of the quarrel, Kennedy had really struggled with himself until he was willing to put his pride in his pocket and had made up his mind to call on Elaine again.

As he entered he saw that it was really of no use, for only Aunt Josephine was in the library.

"Oh, Mr. Kennedy," she said innocently enough, "I'm so sorry she isn't here. There's been something troubling her, and she won't tell me what it is. But she's gone to call on a young woman, a Florence Leigh, I think."

"Florence Leigh!" exclaimed Craig with a start and a frown. "Let me use your telephone."

I had turned my attention in the laboratory to a story I was writing,



As Craig Kennedy Turns on the Current Elaine's Chest Slowly Begins to Rise and Fall.

when I heard the telephone ring. It was Craig. Without a word of apology for his rudeness, which I knew had been purely absent-minded, I heard him say: "Walter, meet me in half an hour outside that Florence Leigh's house."

* * * * * * *

Half an hour later I was waiting near the house in the suburbs to which I had been directed by the strange telephone call the day before. I noticed that it was apparently deserted. The blinds were closed and a "To Let" sign was on the side of the house.

"Hello, Walter," cried Craig at last, bustling along.

He led the way around the side of the house to a window, and, with a powerful grasp, wrenched open the closed shutters. He had just smashed the window when a policeman appeared.

"Hey, you fellows—what are you doing there?" he shouted.

Craig paused a second, then pulled his card from his pocket.

"Just the man I want," he parried, much to the policeman's surprise. "There's something crooked going on here. Follow us in."

We climbed into the window. There was the same living room we had seen the day before. But it was now bare and deserted.

"Come on," cried Kennedy, beckoning us on.

Quickly he rushed through the house. There was not a thing in it to change the deserted appearance of the first floor. At last it occurred to Craig to grope his way down cellar. There was nothing there.

Kennedy had been carefully going over the place, and was at the other side of the cellar from ourselves when I saw him stop and gaze at the floor.

"Hide," he whispered suddenly to us.

We waited a moment. Nothing happened. Had he been seeing things or hearing things, I wondered?

From our hidden vantage we could now see a square piece in the floor, perhaps five feet in diameter, slowly open up as though on a pivot.

The weird and sinister figure of a man appeared. Over his head he wore a peculiar helmet with hideous glass pieces over the eyes and tubes that connected with a tank which he carried buckled to his back.

Quickly he closed down the cover of the tube, but not before a vile effluvium seemed to escape, and penetrate even to us in our hiding places. As he moved forward, Kennedy gave a flying leap at him, and we followed with a regular football interference.

It was the work of only a moment for us to subdue and hold him, while Craig ripped off the helmet.

It was Dan the Dude.

"What's that thing?" I puffed, as I helped Craig with the headgear.

"An oxygen helmet," he replied. "There must be air down the tube that cannot be breathed."

He went over to the tube. Carefully he opened the top and gazed down, starting back a second later, with his face puckered up at the noxious odor.

"Sewer gas," he ejaculated, as he slammed the cover down. Then he added to the policeman: "Where do you suppose it comes from?"

"Why," replied the officer, "the St. James viaduct—an old sewer—is somewhere about these parts."

Kennedy puckered his face as he gazed at our prisoner. He reached down quickly and lifted something off the man's coat.

"Golden hair," he muttered. "Elaine's!"

A moment later he seized the man and shook him roughly.

"Where is she—tell me?" he demanded.

The man snarled some kind of a reply, refusing to say a word about her.

"Tell me," repeated Kennedy.

"Humph!" snorted the prisoner, more close-mouthed than ever.

Kennedy was furious. As he sent the man reeling away from him he seized the oxygen helmet and began putting it on. There was only one thing to do—to follow the clue of the golden strands of hair.

Down into the pest hole he went, his head protected by the oxygen helmet. As he cautiously took one step after another down a series of iron rungs inside the hole, he found that the water was up to his chest. At the bottom of the perpendicular pit was a narrow, low passageway leading off. It was just about big enough to get through, but he managed to grope along it.

The minutes passed as the policeman and I watched our prisoner in the cellar by the tube. I looked anxiously at my watch.

"Craig!" I shouted at last, unable to control my fears for him.

No answer.

By this time Craig had come to a small, open chamber, into which the viaduct widened. On the wall he found another series of iron rungs, up which he climbed. The gas was terrible.

As he neared the top of the ladder he came to a shelf-like aperture in the sewer chamber, and gazed about. It was horribly dark. He reached out and felt a piece of cloth. Anxiously he pulled on it. Then he reached further into the darkness.

There was Elaine, unconscious, apparently dead.

In desperation Craig carried her down the ladder.

With our prisoner we could only look helplessly around.

"By George, I'm going down after him," I cried in desperation.

"Don't do it," advised the policeman. "You'll never get out."

One whiff of the horrible gas told me that he was right.

"Listen," said the policeman.

There was, indeed, a faint noise from the black depths below us. A rope alongside the rough ladder began to move, as though some one was pulling it taut. He gazed down.

"Craig! Craig!" I called. "Is that you?"

No answer. But the rope still moved. Perhaps the helmet made it impossible for him to hear.

He had struggled back in the swirling current almost exhausted by his helpless burden. Holding Elaine's head above the surface of the water and pulling on the rope to attract my attention, he could neither hear nor shout. He had taken a turn of the rope about Elaine. I tried pulling on it. There was something heavy on the other end, and I kept on pulling.

At last I could make out Kennedy dimly mounting the ladder. The weight was the unconscious body of Elaine which he steadied as he mounted the ladder. I tugged harder and he slowly came up.

Together, at last, the policeman and I reached down and pulled them out.

We placed Elaine on the cellar floor, as comfortably as was possible, and the policeman began his first aid motions for resuscitation.

"No—no!" cried Kennedy. "Not here—take her up where the air is fresher."

With his revolver still drawn to overawe the prisoner, the policeman forced him to aid us in carrying her up the rickety flight of cellar steps. Kennedy followed quickly, unscrewing the oxygen helmet as he went.

In the deserted living room we deposited our senseless burden, while Kennedy, the helmet off now, bent over her.

"Quick—quick!" he cried to the officer. "An ambulance!"

"But the prisoner," the policeman indicated.

"Hurry—hurry; I'll take care of him," urged Craig, seizing the policeman's pistol and thrusting it into his pocket. "Walter, help me."

He was trying the ordinary methods of resuscitation. Meanwhile the officer had hurried out, seeking the nearest telephone, while we worked madly to bring Elaine back.

Again and again Kennedy bent and outstretched her arms, trying to induce respiration again. So busy was I that for the moment I forgot our prisoner.

But Dan had seen his chance. Noiselessly he picked up the old chair in the room and with it raised was approaching Kennedy to knock him out.

Before I knew it myself Kennedy had heard him. With a half instinctive motion he drew the revolver from his pocket and, almost before I could see it, had shot the man. Without a word he returned the gun to his pocket and again bent over Elaine, without so much as a look at the crook, who sank to the floor, dropping the chair from his nerveless hands.

Already the policeman had got an ambulance, which was now tearing along to us.

Frantically Kennedy was working.

A moment he paused and looked at me—hopeless.

Just then, outside, we could hear the ambulance, and a doctor and two attendants hurried up to the door. Without a word the doctor seemed to appreciate the gravity of the case.

He finished his examination and shook his head.

"There is no hope—no hope," he said slowly.

Kennedy merely stared at him. But the rest of us instinctively removed our hats.

Kennedy gazed at Elaine, overcome. Was this the end?

It was not many minutes later that Kennedy had Elaine in the little sitting room off the laboratory, having taken her there in the ambulance, with the doctor and two attendants.

Elaine's body had been placed on a couch, covered by a blanket, and the shades were drawn. The light fell on her pale face.

There was something incongruous about death and the vast collection of scientific apparatus, a ghastly mocking of humanity. How futile was it all in the presence of the great destroyer!

Aunt Josephine had arrived, stunned, and a moment later Perry Bennett. As I looked at the sorrowful party Aunt Josephine rose slowly from her position on her knees, where she had been weeping silently beside Elaine, and pressed her hands over her eyes, with every indication of faintness.

Before any of us could do anything, she had staggered into the laboratory itself. Bennett and I followed quickly. There I was busy for some time getting restoratives.

Meanwhile Kennedy, beside the couch, with an air of desperate determination, turned away and opened a cabinet. From it he took a large coil and attached it to a storage battery, dragging the peculiar apparatus near Elaine's couch.

To an electric light socket Craig attached wires. The doctor watched him in silent wonder.

"Doctor," he asked slowly as he worked, "do you know of Professor Leduc of the Nantes School of Medicine?"

"Why—yes," answered the doctor, "but what of him?"

"Then you know of his method of electrical resuscitation."

"Yes—but"—he paused, looking apprehensively at Kennedy.

Craig paid no attention to his fears, but, approaching the couch on which Elaine lay, applied the electrodes. "You see," he explained, with forced calmness, "I apply the anode here—the cathode there."

The ambulance surgeon looked on excitedly, as Craig turned on the current, applying it to the back of the neck and to the spine.

For some minutes the machine worked.

Then the young doctor's eyes began to bulge.

"My heavens!" he cried under his breath. "Look!"

Elaine's chest had slowly risen and fallen. Kennedy, his attention riveted on his work, applied himself with redoubled efforts. The young doctor looked on with increased wonder.

"Look! The color in her face! See her lips!" he cried.

At last her eyes slowly fluttered open—then closed.

Would the machine succeed? Or was it just the galvanic effect of the current? The doctor noticed it, and placed his ear quickly to her heart. His face was a study in astonishment. The minutes sped fast.

Elaine Confronts Kennedy With the "Poisoned Kiss" Photographs.

To us outside, who had no idea what was transpiring in the other room, the minutes were leaden-footed. Aunt Josephine, weak but now herself again, was sitting nervously.

Just then the door opened.

I shall never forget the look on the young ambulance surgeon's face as he murmured under his breath, "Come here—the age of miracles is not passed—look!"

Raising his finger to indicate that we were to make no noise, he led us into the other room.

Kennedy was bending over the couch.

Elaine, her eyes open now, was gazing up at him, and a wan smile flitted over her beautiful face.

Kennedy had taken her hand, and as he heard us enter, turned half way to us, while we stared in blank wonder from Elaine to the weird and complicated electrical apparatus.

"It's the life current," he said simply, patting the Leduc apparatus with his other hand.

Sketches of Prominent Passengers.

Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt inherited most of the estate of the late Cornelius Vanderbilt, valued in 1899 at over $70,000,000. The will recognized Alfred as the new head of the house of Vanderbilt. Mr. Vanderbilt was born in New York, Oct. 20, 1877, the son of Cornelius and Alice Gwynne Vanderbilt. He was twice married. The first Mrs. Vanderbilt was Elsie French. She divorced him in April, 1908. The present Mrs. Vanderbilt was Mrs. Smith Hollins McKim, formerly Miss Margaret Emerson, of Baltimore. She and Mr. Vanderbilt were married in England, Dec. 11, 1911. They have a three-year-old son.

Elbert Hubbard, generally known as Fra Elbertus, author, journalist, lecturer and farmer, is best known by his two publications, "The Philistine" and "The Fra," and the product of his bookbinderies at East Aurora, N. Y. He was born in Bloomington, Ill., in 1859, and educated in the public schools. In East Aurora he founded the Roycroft Press, where were turned out limp covered editions of the classics and of Hubbard's writings. Elbert Hubbard's first wife divorced him in 1902, and later he married Alice L. Moore, an East Aurora school teacher, named as co-respondent.

Justus Miles Forman, writer, has written books, plays, short stories and magazine articles. He was born in Leroy, N. Y., Nov. 1, 1875, and was educated at Yale and in Paris. His best known books are "The Garden of Lies," Jason" and "The Unknown Lady."

Charles Klein, the playwright, who was formerly with Charles Frohman, the theatrical manager, as a censor of plays, is known as the author of "The District Attorney," "The Auctioneer," "The Music Master," "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Third Degree" and "The Gamblers," among other successful plays. He was born in London in 1867.

Charles Frohman was on one of his annual trips to Europe to look over the dramatic productions in London and Paris. It was there that he obtained many of the plays upon which his first successes were based. For many years he had arrangements with the greatest dramatists of England and France—Pinero, Shaw, Davies, Hadon Chambers Fiers and de Caillvet, Bernstein, Rostand—for the exclusive rights to all their plays. Until recently Frohman made almost as many and as important productions at his London theaters as in New York.

Paul Crompton lived in Philadelphia and was president of the Surpass Leather company and a stockholder and the American representative of the Booth Steamship company, which operates a line of ships from Liverpool to Brazil. Two weeks ago Crompton decided that his financial interests in England needed his undivided attention, and he made arangements to move to London with his family.

William S. Hodges, his wife and two sons, of Philadelphia, were on their way to Paris, where Hodges intended to take permanent charge of the offices in the Baldwin Locomotive works in France. His duties were to sell locomotives to the French government and supervise the assembling of engines sent to that country in separate parts. Hodges' children are W. Sterling Hodges, Jr., and Dean Winston Hodges.

Mr. and Mrs. John Catherwood, of West Chester, were among the second class passengers. Mr. Catherwood is an Irishman and has been in this country about ten years. He was foreman of three mushroom raising plants for Edward H. Jacobs, at West Chester. Mr. Catherwood had been in ill health for some time, and decided to take a trip to Ireland, in the hope of regaining his health. The pair intended to visit Mr. Catherwood's mother in the north of Ireland.

Another passenger was A. L. Hopkins, president of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock company, and F. J. Gauntlett, foreign representative of that company, who were going to England on business. Both were listed as from New York.

Among the Chicagoans who sailed on the Lusintania were Charles A. Plamondon, a wealthy manufacturer, bank director and social leader, and Mrs. Plamondon. William Mounsey was another passenger. Mounsey, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Lunn, booked passage to investigate a report that his wife, reported lost on the Empress of Ireland, was in an English poorhouse, unconscious of her own identity.

SAYS LINER WAS ARMED

German Official Statement Declares Americans Were Warned.

The following official communication was issued in Berlin:

"The Cunard liner Lusitania was torpedoed by a German submarine and sunk.

"The Lusitania was naturally armed with guns, as were recently most of the English mercantile steamships. Moreover, as is well known in Berlin, she had large quantities of war material in her cargo.

"Her owners, therefore, knew to what danger the passengers were exposed. They alone bear all the responsibility for what has happened.

"Germany, on her part, left nothing undone to repeatedly and strongly warn them. The imperial ambassador in Washington even went so far as to make a public warning, so as to draw attention to this danger. The English press sneered then at the warning and relied on the protection of the British fleet to safeguard Atlantic traffic."

Hundreds of telegrams of congratulation are being sent to Admiral von Tirpitz, the German minister of marine, on the sinking of the Lusitania, which is considered by the Germans to be an answer to the destruction, off the Falkland Islands, of the German squadron under the command of Admiral von Spee.

WASHINGTON'S VIEW.

Never since that April day three years ago, when word came that the Titanic had gone down, has Washington been so stirred as it is over the sinking of the Lusitania. The early reports told that there had been no loss of life, but the relief that these advices caused gave way to the greatest concern later when it became known that there had been many deaths. Although they are profoundly reticent, officials realize that this tragedy, involving the loss of American citizens, is likely to bring about a crisis in the international relations of the United States.

Suffrage and Anti Suffrage.

Their belief in two things divide the suffragist from the anti-suffragist. It is their belief in Democracy and their belief in women.

We claim that the individual is the unit of our government, and the anti-suffragists claim that the family is the unit.

When the latter are confronted with the fact of manhood suffrage they say they do not believe in pure Democracy but in representation.

What becomes of representation when the vote of one man who stands for six women in his family counts for as much as the vote of the man who has no women to represent? We have much impure Democracy; what we want is a government founded on justice to all.

Below all the arguments of good and bad laws, of good and bad women, of wet and dry states, if stories of what he said or what she said, lies the belief, or lack of belief in the rule of the people, and the moral worth of womankind.

It comes with poor grace from one who is opposing woman's ballot to lament over the fact that men do not vote. Our towns, our state, and our country need both men and women who are alive to their duty of making our land a better place to live in, a better home, and who should realize that our government has to do with our lives, and should be made as clean and as good as we wish our homes to be.

Taxation, it is true, is levied largely on property but every individual helps pay the taxes of our government in the prices paid for food, clothes, and a place to live.

There is no reason that women should be more partisan with the ballot than without it, and in questions relating to their interests they have shown themselves non partisan in the states where they vote. It was the women of Colorado who elected Judge Lindsey, in spite of the opposition of the parties.

We suffragists do not claim that we will make all things good, but we do claim that women have made things better in all the countries where they vote, and that we should be given the chance in our own state to try.

We believe that all work which can be shared honestly by both men and women is better done and more worth doing because of the sharing, and we believe that the ballot in the hands of the women will do much to awaken all the people to our country's needs.

We must arouse a better civic conscience, and no state needs it more than Pennsylvania. There are enough honest men and women in Pennsylvania to make it a white state if they were all awake to their duty.

We shall go on working to arouse the women of our land to a sense of their responsibility in our common life, and we hope that the men of Pennsylvania will help us next November in this work.

A Welcome Pay Envelope

HONEST, old man, I don't know what we would have done without that ÆTNA ACCUMULATIVE ACCIDENT POLICY.

When a fellow lives on the "no-work-no-pay basis" and has nothing to fall back on, a cracked head and a broken arm don't get him anything. All he can do is sit around and wonder how the wife can scrape together enough to keep the family going. He just naturally worries himself twice as sick.

But this Ætna Accident Policy takes the place of the pay envelope. Gives you $50 a week as long as you're totally disabled by your injuries and $25 a week even though you are only partially disabled by them. Pays the bill for a surgical operation, too.

All you do is sit back and tell your broken head and arm: "All right, boys, take your time about healing. I'm provided for until you're fit again."
